

APPENDICES

SYNOPSIS OF THE INVISIBLE MAN

Griffin is a provincial professor who is a genius. He is not satisfied with his life and finds that people are not aware of his existence. He plans to discover invisibility scientifically, which he thinks could make him memorable. He makes mistakes which are disadvantages for his own father and people around him because he is a very ambitious person and he does anything, whether it is good or bad, to accomplish his ambition. He formulates the invisibility of his body, and he succeeds. Still, he has to reverse his discovery in order to establish it, or else it is wasted. Realizing that people have already become aware of an invisible man, he plans to terrorize them with his advantages of being invisible. Besides, he wants Kemp, a friend of his, to cooperate with him in fulfilling his ambition. Griffin is so selfish that he is not concerned about his friend's plan to stop his reign of terror and put him in jail. Having known that Kemp is a traitor, he becomes more furious and he begins to hurt people. In fact, he has killed some men whom he suspects will disturb his plans. The people who chase him finally catch him and assault him until he dies. His ambition fails and so does his life. He dies without any pride, with unfulfilled dreams.