Synopsis of Rainbow Six

A mysterious incident happens in New York, when some homeless people are taken by some volunteers from a medical corporation named Horizon Corporation. The homeless people are taken to some kind of facility and they become the test subjects of a new virus called Shiva.

Meanwhile, CIA's operatives John Clark, Domingo 'Ding' Chavez and Alistair Stanley (a SAS officer), move from the United States to Hereford, England, to join an elite and multinational counter-terrorist team named Rainbow. Soon after Clark, Chavez, and Stanley have been introduced to the team, Rainbow Team immediately has to go on a mission. A bank in Bern, Switzerland, has been robbed by a group of terrorists. Rainbow Team under Chavez's command disguises as Swiss police and successfully takes down the terrorists. Another mission for Rainbow Team to take is to free an Austrian businessman who has been kidnapped by German terrorists, who believe that the Austrian has a special code that can lead to an international trading market, which is believed to be held by elite capitalists. Again, Rainbow Team successfully takes down the terrorists.

The real threat comes from a radical nature worshipper named John Brightling. His plan is to wipe out the entire human race, except the conspirators, using Shiva through the Olympic Games in Sydney. Horizon's CEO, John Brightling, hires an ex-KGB officer, Dimitriy Popov, to extinguish the Rainbow Team's existence. After Dmitry Popov fails to beat the Rainbow Team, he learns that he indirectly helps the extinction of human beings including himself and decides to help Rainbow Team to catch John Brightling. Rainbow Team manages to defeat the terrorists in their hideout deep inside a Brazilian rain forest.
