

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

In this chapter, I would like to conclude that teaching an introvert child like Kenzie is not easy. He is different from others, so I must understand him. I have two causes and two effects of my problem in handling an introvert student. The first cause is Kenzie felt shy when he met me as his new teacher. The second cause is Kenzie tended to be quiet, while doing the speaking and reading tests. Then, the first effect is Kenzie did not have any friends, because he did not want to socialize with others. The second effect is Kenzie had a poor performance in speaking and reading tests.

After I describe the causes and the effects, I have three potential solutions to handle this problem. First, I will motivate Kenzie before the test by having a friendly talk with him; for example, I ask him to share a story about his daily activities at his school. Second, I give rewards to Kenzie like a sticker or stamp for his tests. Third, I try to build his confidence with unfamiliar people, especially with me as his new teacher.

As a conclusion, I will choose two solutions for handling an introvert child. In my opinion, the first solution for handling him is to motivate him before the test by having a friendly talk with him; for example, I ask him to share a story about his daily activities at his school. By doing this or just sharing stories with him, he feels more comfortable with me. As a result, he enjoys sharing stories with me. The second solution is I will try to build his confidence with unfamiliar people, especially with me as his new teacher. I choose this solution, because I will be able to make him more confident to speak with new people.

In my opinion, an introvert child should be made more motivated in order to do his exercises. Then, by telling short stories he will be more enthusiastic to study English. In this way, it is easier for the teacher to make the pupils closer to him or her. Then for the pupils, they will become more confident to answer the questions in class or socialize with new people. Moreover, they will not feel afraid of the teacher, because they are already familiar with the teacher.
