

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

In the previous chapters, I have analyzed the problem I found during my internship, the causes and the effects of the problem and three potential solutions to solve my problem. The problem is that when I teach in LLC, students do not come to my class regularly.

There are some causes and effects of this problem. The two causes of my problem are that the schedule between me, another teacher (Mrs. Aryanti), and the students is not well-organized and the students are too tired because of their activities before coming to my class. The effects of my problem are that it is difficult for the students who do not attend my class regularly to keep up with the lessons given, and it is also difficult for me to teach students who do not come to my class regularly. Moreover, students who are used to not attending my class regularly become more undisciplined to attend my class.

To solve this problem, there are three potential solutions. First, I should make interesting lessons to attract students to keep coming to class. Second, I should give rewards to the students who are disciplined in coming to my class regularly and give a penalty to the ones who are not. Third, I should hold a meeting with Mrs. Aryanti and each student' parents to arrange students' schedules based on the schedule of Mrs. Aryanti's class and students' activities.

Based on the analysis of all chapters, the best solutions to my problem is the combination of all the three potential solutions. The first solution is that I should make interesting lessons to attract students to keep coming to class. As a result, the students will be more interested to study and they will feel motivated to learn and keep coming regularly. The second solution is that I should give rewards to the students who are disciplined in coming to my class regularly and give a penalty to the ones who are not.

Consequently, the students will be proud of themselves when given rewards and motivated to come to class, whereas, when given a penalty, students can learn how to be disciplined by coming to class regularly. After giving interesting lessons, it is important for me to provide rewards and penalty. Therefore, I will not only make the students interested in the lessons but with rewards I will also be able to make them motivated to come to class, whereas with a penalty I will be able to make the students disciplined to come to class regularly. The third solution is that I should hold a meeting with Mrs. Aryanti and each student's parents to arrange students' schedules based on the schedule of Mrs. Aryanti's class and the students' activities. Consequently, it will create a good relationship between students' parents, other teacher (Mrs. Aryanti) and me.

Furthermore, the parents, Mrs. Aryanti, and I can work together to make the students disciplined and responsible for the schedule that has been set. After I have given interesting lessons, given rewards and penalty, it will be complete if I hold a meeting with Mrs. Aryanti and each student's parents to arrange schedules based on the schedule of Mrs. Aryanti's class and students' activities because when we meet to arrange students' schedule, we can tell each other what is needed for the children's better achievement.

Thus, the combination of these three solutions is very useful to make the students come to class regularly because these three solutions support one another. When the students are given interesting lessons, rewards, and penalty, the students are expected to be disciplined to come to class regularly. Furthermore, cooperating with students' parents and Mrs. Aryanti will help me make the students' parents be involved in making the students disciplined and responsible for the schedule that has been set.

The conclusion is that I should give interesting lessons, give rewards to the students who are disciplined in coming to my class regularly and give a penalty to the ones who are not, and hold a meeting with Mrs. Aryanti and each student's parents. With these three solutions, I believe that students will be attracted to come to class and be disciplined to come to my class regularly.
